The Crucial Role of Ozone in Absorbing Ultraviolet Radiation

Absorption Levels	Atmospheric Protection	Surface Exposure
Ozone absorbs the most ultraviolet radiation at altitudes between 20 and 50 km, with a peak absorption at around 0.255 microns. This absorption process is responsible for the increase in temperature with height in the stratosphere.	As a result of ozone's absorption, the atmosphere blocks around 98% of the ultraviolet radiation that would otherwise reach the Earth's surface. This protection is critical for the survival of life on our planet.	The remaining 2% of ultraviolet radiation that reaches the Earth's surface is still crucial for various natural processes, such as vitamin D synthesis in humans and photosynthesis in plants.

The Vital Role of Ozone in Sustaining Life on Earth.pptx - LibreOffice Impress

The Importance of the Ozone Layer for Life on Earth

UV Radiation Protection	Temperature Regulation
The ozone layer shields the Earth from harmful ultraviolet radiation, which can cause skin cancer, eye damage, and harm to plant and animal life.	The absorption of UV radiation by ozone contributes to the temperature structure of the stratosphere, maintaining a stable and habitable environment for life on Earth.
